J. Dino Vasquez is a commercial litigator, licensed in California, Washington and Alaska. He represents clients in all three states and actively practices in state, federal and administrative courts.

He handles local, national and international commercial disputes and transactions. He focuses on the rights and obligations of parties in commercial transactions and trade matters.

As part of his international practice, Dino has litigated before the Court of International Trade and international tribunals for arbitration and mediation. He also provides advice regarding compliance with import, export, trade statutes and treaties. He interacts and negotiates with the U.S. State Department and its Office of Defense Trade Control, in addition to its Department of Commerce, Bureau of Industry and Security, Department of Justice, Department of Homeland Security and office of Customs Enforcement. On behalf of carriers, freight forwarders, importers and exporters, he has also litigated maritime and domestic transport matters involving cargo and bill of lading disputes, property and vessel damage and warehousing disputes.

In his domestic practice, Dino represents and counsels professionals, such as lawyers, agents, brokers, general contractors, developers and owners, engineers and architects with professional liability issues, risk management and transactions. He has represented property owners, general contractors and subcontractors on major construction litigation involving lease disputes, breach of contract, construction defect claims, condemnation/eminent domain litigation with governmental entities and property rights disputes between adjoining property owners. He has represented both insureds and insurers in complex, high-value property claims and coverage disputes.

Dino is active in community issues such as hunger relief and childhood development through his involvement as a Director on Food Lifeline's Board and Director of the West Seattle/Fauntleroy YMCA Board. He also provides pro bono services to the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.
